RELEASE

MAJOR ACQUISITION BY CENTRE POMPIDOU, Paris of works by Nancy WILSON-PAJIC

Galerie Miranda is delighted to announce the acquisition by the Centre Pompidou Musée National d'Art Moderne (Paris) of a broad ensemble of works by represented artist Nancy Wilson-Pajic (1941, French-American).

Produced between 1962 and 2004, the selection is comprised of 9 medium and large format cyanotype and gum bichromate works from the period 1984-2004, acquired by the museum from Galerie Miranda, and is completed by 19 historical and unique works - photography, sound, collage, drawing, text - from the 1960s to the 1980s, for the most part never exhibited in Europe and that are donated by the artist. They will join and complement the works by Nancy Wilson-Pajic already in the Centre Pompidou collection.

Discussions for this acquisition were initiated in spring 2024 between the artist, her gallerist Miranda Salt, and Julie Jones, Senior Photography Curator at Centre Pompidou, with the support of the museum acquisitions committee. Florian Ebner (Head of the Photography Department at the Centre Pompidou Musée National d'Art Moderne) finalised the acquisition after Jones' departure from the museum in January 2026.

Nancy Wilson-Pajic's first art projects were made in her home town of Peru, Indiana, and then in New York City in the 1960s and 70s, where she frequented the avant-garde art scene and co-founded the feminist art space A.I.R gallery, still in activity today. In 1978 she moved permanently to France with her husband, multimedia artist Slobodan Pajic. Spanning over 6 decades, her career developed around three main chapters of practice and investigation:

- 1960s-70s: Performance, installation, text; narrative, women's identity
- 1980s-90s: Photographic process; memory, place and representation; beauty and the ordinary
- From 1995: Large format cyanotypes; presence and absence. Major public and private commissions notably for textile museums and fashion houses including Christian Lacroix, Dior Haute Couture, Alexander McQueen Haute Couture

Today, Nancy Wilson-Pajic's career is well represented in French and international collections, in particular with works exploring photographic process. The importance of this acquisition by the Centre Pompidou is to reveal, underscore and enshrine the ground-breaking nature of Nancy Wilson-Pajic's early conceptual and feminist works, deepening understanding by the public, curators and art historians of her later works and guarantees the preservation of a vast career ensemble in a prestigious international public collection.

To celebrate this acquisition and recognition of Nancy Wilson-Pajic's singular career, Galerie Miranda proposes a personal exhibition at the gallery :

REMODELLING
1959 - 1969

I went back to visit my home town 10 years after the first photos had been taken. My mother didn't like my long, straight hair and offered to have her hair dresser give me a correct hair style. So I took one of my high school graduation photos with me and asked him to give me the same cut as I had then. I then went to the same photographer who had made the portrait and had him make me new ones. He suggested more glamorous poses. My mother was very happy with the results.

ARTIST BIOGRAPHY

NANCY WILSON-PAJIC (b. 1941, Indiana, USA, lives and works in France since 1978)

After studying drawing, painting and sculpture, as well as literature and psychology at Cooper Union in New York, Nancy Wilson-Pajic abandoned the pictorial form for an interdisciplinary practice, with first in situ interventions from 1965, in the interstices of daily life and composed principally of recorded texts. Her first New York exhibitions of object-text installations were held at the pioneering A.I.R. feminist artist-run space, co-founded by Wilson-Pajic and located at 112 Greene Street, drew the attention of the 1970s avant-garde art community and opened the way to an international career. Wilson-Pajic photographed these early - often ephemeral - installations, principally to archive them. However, quickly concluding that the translation of work in space into pictorial form did not respect the original statement, she decided, upon her arrival in Paris in 1978, to explore the mechanisms by which the world is transformed into images.

At this time, she began researching traditional photographic processes such as carbon prints, gum bichromate and cyanotypes, their relationship to the artistic subject, and to writing. Her first series combining these different disciplines and interrogations, entitled Le Cirque, was exhibited at the Centre Georges Pompidou in Paris in 1983.

> "The standard silver print had neither the permanence nor the exclusivity that corresponded to the definition of fine art at that time ("entirely of the hand of the artist", Maison des Artistes). Thus, I explored the possibilities of the pigment print, which was of exemplary stability to light, pollution and time, required manual intervention and the artist's interpretation. This work, along with my reputation as an artist, was supported by a group of highly motivated curators and critics who worked to establish photography as a fine art. After an intense period of experimentation, I chose the gum dichromate process, which corresponded most closely to my approach. The pigment printing processes gave older negatives the mysterious nature inherent in their existence as memory. The material quality of the print added an effect of distance of the image which corresponded to the fact that they were remembrance of a remote and inaccessible past."

From 1985, she decided to produce large format works in a pictorial form; in 1988 she completed her research with a project in color that posed questions about erasure, memory and its disappearance. The discovery of the photogram process offered another field to explore in the relation between the object and its document, that she explored notably with clothing, in a perspective of presence and absence, with a commission for the new lace museum in Calais, then with the robes of Christian Lacroix Haute-Couture.

In questioning the representative character of photography and its relation to text and other forms of information, Nancy Wilson-Pajic quickly emerged as a precursor of the artists' photography movement:

> "My work is concerned with the processes by which information accumulates and is transformed – by juxtaposition with other information, by memory, and by the individual's order of priorities. I have used sound recordings and written text, video and film, photographs, drawings and computer technologies — in installations, in book form and on the wall — to create mental spaces within which creative reflection may take place."

Throughout her distinguished and singular career Nancy Wilson-Pajic has participated in more than 450 personal and group exhibitions in galleries and museums around the world and three retrospective exhibitions have been devoted to her work by contemporary art museums. Her work features in the permanent collections of the Musée national d'Art Moderne (Paris), Musée d'Elysée (Lausanne), French National Contemporary Art Collection (Fonds National d'Art contemporain, Paris), Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris), Museet for Fotokunst (Odense), Nouveau Musée National de Monaco, Daelim Contemporary Art Museum (Seoul, Korea) and the Musée Réattu (Arles), to name but a few. In 1996 Nancy Wilson-Pajic was named Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres.

GALERIE MIRANDA, à propos

Founded in 2018 by Miranda Salt, French-Australian with a degree in political science who has lived and worked in France since 1995, Galerie Miranda is an art gallery and bookstore specializing in photography. It showcases major works and artists recognized in their countries of origin, but whose work is still relatively unseen in France and Europe, with a particular focus—though not exclusively—on women artists. Galerie Miranda proposes a dynamic and thought-provoking program that spans eras and styles, often favouring rare and historical works and occasionally includes painting and drawing. Exhibitions have included historical gems such as André Kertész's Polaroids, Jan Groover's chromogenic still lifes and Dave Heath's vintage prints, as well as the powerful contemporary abstractions of Mariah Robertson and Ellen Carey, and the monumental camera obscura photographs of John Chiara. The gallery's identity is particularly associated with the ground breaking work of three women artists – Merry Alpern, Ellen Carey, Nancy Wilson-Pajic – whom the gallery has represented since its foundation.
